'T WAS A GREAT DAY IN TONOPAH

ESPECIALLY HAPPY AND MERRY TIME FOR THE LITTLE ONES.

Tonopah had a merry Christmas, and one which will long be remembered in the camp. The spirit of peace and good will to men surely abided in our midst, and everybody seemed happy. It was especially a happy day for the little ones. There was a big Christmas tree for them in the Elks' quarters, and another in the hall of the Miners' Union. The youngsters had their fill of goodies, and not one of them went away from either tree without a Christmas present of some sort. There were many little acts of kindness to those who had not been as well blessed as others, and if there were any murmurs against the benevolence of St. Nicholas, they were not heard above the babble of happiness. In the evening there was a vocal and instrumental concert given by the Miners' Union, and there were some most excellent numbers to make the evening a most enjoyable one. The concert was followed by a smoker of the miners and their friends, and several boxing exhibitions, some of which were exciting, and all of which were good sport. At the Elks lodge, in the evening, there was a reception to which everybody was invited, as they were to the Miners, and here was another enjoyable occasion.

The youngsters were in front of the Elks' headquarters long before the doors were thrown open. There were all sorts and sizes of the genus "kid." There was the young Nevada, the little "Injun," who came before the young Nevada; Japanese, Chinese, and the tiny sons of Ham. They were all welcome, independent of creed and color, and they knew that they were, and had no diffidence in finding seats for themselves under the spreading branches of the great Christmas tree.

Puddy Grimes was Santa Claus, and he looked like old Nick, St. Nick, of course. The youngsters were afraid of him at first blush, but they got so before the afternoon wore off that they would take presents right out of his hand. Puddy was assisted in the dispensation of gifts by Walter J. Agnew and Austin Jackson, and with these three, the reception committee comprised the following: L. A. Gibbons, Geo. Thatcher, Ben Rotholz, Robert M. Prouty, Hugh H. Brown, Arthur Perry, James Zeigler and E. Q. Yates.

The tree was a sight that gladdened the eyes of the youngsters, dazzling in its silver tinsel and electric lights, its vari-colored ornaments and the profusion of fruit clustered among its branches. There were not seats enough for the youngsters by far but they found comfortable places on the floor, and at that the floor was crowded. It required two hours and a half to make the rounds, and the little ones, boys and girls, were coming and going all the afternoon. It was a great, joyous occasion, and every tot was made happy. Postmaster Stewart turned over to the Elks all the letters addressed to Santa Claus and every writer received a present.

There was a Christmas tree at Miners' Hall, and the Miners' Union gave presents to the little ones by the cartload. The tree was in the middle of the floor, and an orchestra discoursed sweet music all afternoon for the delectation of the young visitors and their parents. The tree was a gorgeous sight, and the eyes of the youngsters of all nations watered at the array of good things that Santa Claus had in store for them. Fred Lombard was the impersonator of jolly old St. Nicholas, and the little boys and girls got as close up to him as they could. President Smith and Secretary Gori was also much in evidence in their attentions to the children and also to the ladies.

The festival was enlivened by vocal as well as instrumental music, and recitations by some of the little folk, and the retinue of Santa Claus was well entertained while the presents were being dispensed. There was fruit and candy, there were dolls and baby carriages and books for the girls, and there were bicycles and velocipedes and wagons and lots of other things for the boys. It was all just too fine, and the majority of the little ones regretted that they hadn't brought wheelbarrows to pack away the goods that were dispensed to them by generous old Nick.

In the evening there was a concert for a mixed audience, and this was followed by a smoker for the men. There were not a few of the ladies who had come to see what men did, at a smoker, but there were to be a few exciting boxing bouts and there was a compromise, an exhibition match given by the Pierce brothers of Denver. Following was the program:

Selection	Orchestra
Vocal solo	Mr. Burrows
Recitation	Miss Rogers
Piano solo	Mrs. Schilling
Vocal duet	Mrs. Cleary and Mr. Setchell
Selection	Orchestra
Mandolin duet	..
..	Messrs. Maguire and Walker
Four round go	Pierce Brothers
Vocal solo	Miss Rogers
Instrumental duet	..
..	Messrs. Maguire and Stewart
Selection	Orchestra
Vocal solo	Mrs. Cleary
Instrumental solo	..
..	Miss Maimie McDonald
Vocal selection	Mr. Burrows
Selection	Montana Quartette
Vocal solo	Miss Maimie Gomm
Finale	Orchestra

There was not a number of the foregoing that was not fully enjoyed to the limit and there was not a weak number in the entire program. A short intermission followed while the ladies regretfully fled out of the hall, and then the smoker began. There were good smokes and there were sandwiches and beer passed around while the boxing contests waged. C. G. Smith, president of the union, officiated as referee in all the bouts, and there was no fault to find with his decisions. There couldn't be, for he called them all draws.

The first was an interesting go of four rounds between Odell of Denver and Bishop of Los Angeles. It was lively while it lasted and was punctuated by cheers and applause. The second go was between Dan McCarthy of California and William Perini, the pride of the Mizpah. For an amateur Perini made a splendid showing against his heavier opponent, and the battle was a good one all through for keeps. Then followed an interesting exhibition between two newsboys, and that, like the others, was declared a draw.

The committee in charge of the arrangements, both for the afternoon and evening, comprised Fred Lombard, Stewart Macdonald, Blanch Smith, J. J. Benn and Alex. Main.

The Miners' Union desires to return thanks to the business men who contributed to the Christmas tree, and in other ways helped to make the affair a success, and to all the public who had anything to do with the festival, either as contributors or guests. The Christmas festival of the Miners' Union is a yearly affair, and is always looked forward to with appreciation by the young and the old.
